THIS Second Part, or ORTHOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, being widely different from the First, or ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY both as to Matter and Design, it will, I think, be proper, by way of Introduction, to give some account of it.

As to the Matter, whereas the First Part consists of a Collection of Words and Terms of Art used in the English Tongue, together with their Etymologies and Explications; and also some other Matters mention'd in the Title Page; the chief Design and Use of which is to satisfy the Curious from what Original they are derived, and to inform the Unknowing in the meaning of those technical Words or Terms of Art, which so frequently occur, either in Reading or Conversation; but makes no distinction between Words of approv'd Authority, and those that are not: This SECOND PART consists in a Collection of common and familiar Words in the English Tongue, without regard to their Etymologies, &c. and the main design of it is to assist the Ignorant in the ORTHOGRAPHY (true Spelling, Writing, &c.) and in the ORTHOEPIA (right Pronunciation); and is design'd for the Assistance of as many of our own Country as want it, and Foreigners.

That some such Assistance is wanting appears too obvious to all, by the false Spelling so generally found in the Letters of most of those Persons who have not had the good Fortune of a liberal Education, and who (as the Ingenious Mr. Watts says) having never attained a good knowledge of the general force and sound of the English Letters; nor the customary and various use of Diphthongs; and being utter Strangers to the derivation of Words from foreign Languages, they neither Spell according to Custom, nor to the Sound, nor to the Derivation. And when they have learn'd the use of a Pen, make such a hideous jumble of Letters to stand for Words, that neither the Vulgar nor the Learned can guess what they mean by them.

As a remedy of this Inconveniency I have made the following Collection of Words ordinarily used in the English Tongue, by which a Person about to write, if he has but Knowledge enough to look the Word he wants to spell, alphabetically, may inform himself of the true way of writing it.

And farther, whereas there are many Words used in familiar Conversation, that are humorous or canting Words, and so not fit for a serious Style, as either about Business or Conversation, and others again Words of too technical a cast to suit with a plain Diction, and so would look affected and ridiculous, I have distinguish'd those common Words and of approv'd Authority, imitable by the Illiterate, from those more proper to be used by the more learned Pens, and on jocular Occasions, in Burlesque, Comedy, or free Conversation.

To those Words of approv'd Authority and imitable by the Illiterate, I have prefix'd an Asterism (*), and to the other an Obelisk (†), and some which I would not determine for or against, I have omitted to prefix any Mark at all, leaving them to be used or not, according to the Judgment of the User: But have, I think, mark'd with (*) as good and approv'd Words, enough to serve for use on any common Occasion.

But I would not be understood to mean, that those Words to which I have prefix'd an Obelisk, are Words not fit to be used at all in writing about common Concerns, for many of them may be most proper, drawn by the Pen of an accomplish'd Writer, intermix'd with an agreeable Stile; but that Persons of a slender acquaintance with Literature should rather content themselves with the use of such Words, the force and significancy of which they know proper and apt to convey their Mind, than to intersperse here and there Words above the reach of their Knowledge, either improperly, or in a Stile which in the whole is low and groveling.

Thus much for the Use of the following Collection, as to the true Spelling and proper choice of Words; then as to the Orthoepia, (right Pronunciation) in which many unlearned Persons are defective (especially in technical Words, or Terms of Art or Science) I have plac'd an Accent over that Syllable on which a particular stress or force of Sound is to be laid by the Voice in pronouncing.

As to the second design of this Dictionary for the Use and Assistance of Foreigners that would acquaint themselves with the English Tongue, besides what I have beforemention'd, I have added farther Assistances. I have not indeed always explain'd the Words by other English ones, except where the same Word is used in divers Significations, because to Persons unacquainted with English, that would, for the most part, have been explaining Ignotum per Ignotius, (i.e. what is unknown by what is more unknown); but supposing that the generality of Gentlemen-Travelers are accomplish'd with the knowledge either of the Latin or French Languages, I have added Words synonymous first in French and then in Latin. And tho' the Method is very plain, yet it may not be improper to acquaint the Reader, that the Word or Words following the English Words and distinguish'd by the Italick Letter, are first French Words of the same Signification, which is signified by the Letter F. following them, and the Words after them in the same Character, are Latin ones of the same import, and mark'd with the Letter L. except L. would not stand in the Line, in which case the Letter L. is frequently omitted; and also the Letters F. or L. signifie that the French Word is the same as the English, and is derived of the Latin, differing from it only in a Letter or two, as Disposition, F. of Dispositio, L. And whereas the English and Foreigners, especially the French, differ as to placing the Accent, or laying a particular stress or force of Sound upon Syllables, the English most commonly place the Accent far from the last Syllable, and the French nearer; and this difference in Accentuation makes the Pronunciation of English, according to the Custom of Foreigners, sound uncouthly to English Ears, they have the Accents plac'd over their proper Syllables according to the English Custom.

I did design to have been larger in this Collection of Words and Phrases, but finding the Work to swell under my hands, and about to exceed the number of Sheets convenient for a Volume, was oblig'd to retrench it, but hope not so, but it may answer indifferently well the End propos'd.

I have not room, nor indeed am sensible that more is needful to be said on this occasion, I shall therefore only add, that as I have before hinted, my design is only to be assistant to the Unaccomplish'd, and do not presume to set myself up as a Dictator to the Literati, so I hope to escape the Censure of Arrogance and Presumption, and obtain a favourable Censure on account of any Errors that may have escap'd my notice thro' this Work, from the Ingenious and candid Peruser.

M. BAILEY.

An Orthographical DICTIONARY, English, French and Latin.

PART II.

A

A Is an Article signifying one, as a Man, a Horse, for which the French use un or une.

A before a Word that begins with a Vowel, or an b takes to it an n, to avoid the Disagreeableness of the Sound, occasioned by the meeting of two Vowels, as an Altar, an Horse, &c.

A has oftentimes the Signification of the Preposition, by, as so much a Day. Tant par jour, F. Tantum per diem, L.

A is frequently put between a Verb and a Participle of the present Tense, and has the Signification of the infinitive Mood, as to go a Begging; or of the present Tense when it follows the Verb Substantive am, as, I am a Writing. But tho' this a is commonly used in Speaking, it is not so common in Writing.

A is frequently us'd instead of [the]. English, and [de], French, as, it is two a Clock; Il est deux heures, F. Est hora secunda, L.

A after the Adjectives many, &c. is used to signify the plural Number, as, many a Man, instead of many Men; Plusieurs hommes, F. Multi homines, L.

A is oftentimes an expletive Particle, and is nothing but an Ornament of Discourse, as, What a Fellow are you? Quel homme (qui) êtes vous? F. Quid hominis es tu? L.

A is frequently used for the auxiliary Verb have, as I would a gone, for I would have gone. But this, tho' frequent in Speech, is not in Writing, except Comical or Burlesque.

VOL. II.

A

A is oftentimes used instead of the Preposition in, English, and au, French; as, I was a Bed, i. e. I was in Bed. Je suis au lit, F. Leſto jacebam, L.

A is frequently joined with a Verb, and has the Sense of the Particle of the present Tense, or the preterimperfect Tense, as, I was a sleep, i. e. I did sleep, or I was sleeping. Je ai dormi, F. Dormiebam, L.

* ABA'FT those Parts of a Ship towards the Stern. La poupe, F. Puppis, L.

* To ABA'NDON, to utterly forsake, to cast off; also to give a Person's self up wholly to any prevailing Passion or Vice. Abandonner, F. Amandare, deferere, L.
